Intellectually Curious Problem Solver:

The primary duty of an expert in presenting testimony is to identify problems or obstacles to achieving his clients goals. Problem-finding requires intellectual curiosity, where one is never satisfied with understanding a topic no matter how much expertise and experience one has accumulated on the subject. Intellectual curiosity requires the instinct to explore puzzling questions that may challenge conventional wisdom.

Systemic Thinking:

Expert testimony is founded in systemic thinking. In some cases, the apparent negligence or misconduct of an individual is an indicator of broader systemic issues in the organization. Effective expert witnesses do not rush to find fault and assign blame when they are presented with a claim. They step back and question why that error occurred and whether more fundamental organizational problems have created the condition. Effective expert witnesses identify the underlying systemic issues versus finding a scapegoat.

Testimony in layman's terms using examples:

In a jury trial, the judge is not the one that makes the ultimate decision, it is the jury. The twelve lay people are not lawyers, experts, or real estate professionals. The key is to appeal to the collective wisdom of the jury. A skilled expert witness distills the information into testimony with the skill to explain the matter in a fashion that can be understood by the least intellectually capable member of the jury. An expert can never "talking down" to anyone, communication must be in layman terms.

Confident in cross examination:

The key to effective cross-examination is to be honest and truthful, produce a high-quality job, establish a strict protocol, follow a set procedure, effect high-quality work, submit professional written reports, hire 3rd party proofreading, with all submissions approved by retained counsel. The expert must be one that values confrontation and stands by his or her convictions. The forgoing procedure has a track record of surviving and thriving during cross examination.
